ARMS OF THE VENUS.

AN ENGLISH SCULPTOR'S SOLUTION OF THE MYSTERY.

John Bell Thinks That She Stood In the Vast Amphitheater at Melos Typifying a Great Goddess Confering Honors—A Problem In Art.

Any number of attempts have been made to restore to her original perfection the Venus of Melos, who has stood in armless beauty for the admiration of the thousands of art lovers who visit the Louvre, but the original design is as problematical still as the meaning of the monster that guards the pyramids, and so accustomed have people become to the Venus as it emerged from the ruins of the Melos amphitheater that no sculptor has yet been able to effect a restoration which satisfies the sense thus cultivated. John Bell, an English sculptor, has made the latest restoration.

As no mention appears in ancient records of art, there is no knowing what personage or deity the so called Venus may have been intended to represent. She has been entitled a Venus Victrix, and one of her lost hands is supposed to have held the apple, the award of Paris, while another speculation has been that she formed part of a group with Mars.

According to another idea, she represented a sea nymph, the special protecting Nereid of the isle. By some she has been said to be a Nemesis, in connection possibly with the Athenian massacre of the islanders, about the time of the Peloponnesian war. By others she has been adopted as a Nike or Victory.

Others have assigned to her the names of Sappho, Phryne or a mourning Electra, while yet another version has been that she was a lyre playing muse. The most general idea, however, has been that she was an Aphrodite or Venus, which is highly probable from the almost universal worship of that goddess throughout the coasts and islands of the Aegean archipelago, and it has been suggested that she had a harp in her left hand while she played on it with her right, which the position of the torso and the remains of the arms admit of.

But the most favored and at the same time the least dignified of the floating speculations is that she is coquettishly holding and looking in a mirror.

The argument in favor of this is that a bronze statuette has been discovered in Pompeii which much resembles it, and it is holding and gazing in a mirror.

To very many archaeologists this last seems the most probable solution of its mystery. Certainly the pose is appropriate; certainly the demitoleited condition is in accordance with the theory too. But Mr. Bell is incapable of entertaining this notion of its "motive," and having addressed his thoughts to some mission that seemed to him more worthy he has decided that a great goddess conferring honors is more in keeping with the dignity of the sculpture.

Though small, the island of Melos must at one time have been very populous. It was famous for its catacombs, famous for its cyclopean ramparts and for its huge amphitheater. It was in the ruins of this last, in a cave grotto, that the figure which from the Paris Louvre charms the world was found.

Mr. Bell thinks its original situation was in the amphitheater; that it posed as the genius loci of the structure, and that at some time of commotion it was removed to the grotto for protection and concealment.

"Methinks I see her there," he says, "in the vast amphitheater thronged with adorners of the great goddess, the central object at some high festival."

"Under this aspect what species of motive is open to us for the restoration of this noble work consonant with its grand form and majestic presence? She stands with the utmost firmness and dignity, and a benign smile is on her face as she slightly bends forward. The principal fractures indicate that her left arm and hand was raised and her right advanced before her. The amphitheater in which I assume her to have stood was no doubt the accepted site for the holding of high public festivals and for the bestowal of the insular honors for public services and for literature, philosophy, poetry, music and the drama, and for victories in athletic games, which formed so integral a part in the culture of the Greek race. From the above considerations has sprung my conception of what it is possible she may have represented and the mode in which the lost arms and hands may have been held and employed."

In pursuance of this conception Mr. Bell has invested his attempt at restoration with "the character of a great goddess confering honors." One hand bestows a wreath of glory; the other holds one in reserve and there you have a Venus Denatrix.—Magazine of Art.

Simple Diet.
A woman who writes for newspapers said the other day in the course of a discussion on modern cookery: "I have a family of three growing boys as well as a hungry husband to cater for, and my experience has been that I can do it most effectually on the simplest diet. I do not mean by that unpalatable food or that which is poorly prepared. I mean a good deal of steaks and chops, with well prepared vegetables. I have no time myself to see after the affairs of the kitchen, and I cannot afford to hire what is called a 'fancy cook,' but I have come to the conclusion that my family thrives best on what is thus given them, substantial but not rich nor varied dishes. At any rate, they are always well and strong and happy, and what more can I ask than that?"—New York World.

Blind's Sometimes.
"Do you think," said Willie Washington, "that it actually hurts a man to be hit with one of Cupid's arrows?" "No," replied Belle Pepperton. "As a rule, he merely becomes senseless for a time."—Washington Star.
